The "Baby"

By EDWARD L. RECKARD

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastment

Mr John Lloyd suffered the guilt of an eavesdropper, and for the moment was deeply and regretfully conscious of his crime.

He mechanically removed from his mouth an unlighted cigar, and pressed his lips determinedly. There could be no mistaking the words spoken in Mrs. Melton's soft, motherly voice. Mr. Lloyd stopped still on the staircase and deliberately listened.

"Martha is coming with the baby tomorrow on the 12 o'clock train from Albany." Mrs. Melton was saying. The rustling of note paper revealed her source of information to Mr. Lloyd as plainly as if he were in the sitting room itself.

"And to stay a whole month!" cried Miss Edith the one remaining member of the Melton family who as yet had escaped, through no fault of her own, the matrimonial halter Mr Lloyd tolerated Miss Edith because she was in the house when he took up his residence with the Meltons a year ago. Next to babies, Mr Lloyd abominated spinsters of certain age out of pure fear of their possible designs upon innocent and unsuspecting bachelors

"They can have the big spare room, and"—

Mr. Lloyd did not wait to hear the conclusion of the sentence, spoken in Mr Melton's hearty tones He stepped quietly out of the wide, old fashioned hallway into the twilight and moodily walked toward his law office, adjoining the courthouse at the other end of the prosperous little county seat where he had won a name for himself in the few years he had resided in Blairville

The spare room was across the hall from Mr Lloyd's own ample and handsomely furnished snuggery. So "Martha and the baby" were to go in the spare room, were they? The doors were to hang, the baby was to bawl and all of the members of the household were to run up stairs and down again forty times an hour for eighteen hours a day and, from Mr Lloyd's unsympathetic and pitifully deficient understanding as to babies, eighty-one hours a night, waiting on the baby," making life miserable for the star boarder and supposedly delightful for everybody else? Not if John Lloyd knew it! He would return to the hotel in the village, at which he had been a central figure until the day he had gone with the Meltons in their big, rambling home on the hill among the maples. Hotel life had its drawbacks, but the proprietor had been under contract not to room doting mothers and leathery lunged infants within hearing of Mr Lloyd's apartment.

The next morning at breakfast Mr Lloyd's silence and gloom were in marked contrast with the animated table conversation regarding the visitors who were to arrive that day. He had tried a dozen times during the meal to tell them that he was to give up his room and return to the hotel, but each time the words stuck in his throat He finally decided that he would quietly return to the house during the morning, put his things in order and later send for them with a polite note of explanation at the suddenness of his departure

True to his resolution, Mr. Lloyd crept into the house unobserved and placed his effects in some semblance of order for removal With every sound from below he fancied he distinguished agonized squeals in infantile treble, mingled with the chorus of adult voices in soothing efforts to quiet the tempest Warm and flustered for a dignified bachelor of thirty five Mr Lloyd slipped down the side stairs to sit out on the little porch to which led the short cut up the hill from the railroad station

None of the family had observed his burglarious entrance or hasty exit, but shades of Blackstone, a woman was coming along the narrow path over the rear lawn, directly up to the little porch—a woman in a neat traveling gown and carrying a suit case!

"Caught!" groaned Mr Lloyd aloud, and he felt a hot glow of shame and vexation sweep over him "Here's Martha by all that has to do with babies, fat or lean, squealing or cooing"

The feminine gender in the traveling gown paused at the foot of the steps, gazed in amazement at Mr Lloyd's stern and heated features and displayed from beneath a big hat the rosy face of a very pretty girl Mr Lloyd had not seen her profile because of the hat, and now that it came into full view he looked again and did not remove his eyes from the roguish ones that sought his so inquiringly

"Martha, I suppose?" he ventured, impolitely, scornfully and audibly

"Sir!" The red lips parted haughtily, and the trim figure straightened perceptibly in the traveling gown at the strange salutation.

"You're Martha, Mrs Melton's sister, of course, but where's"— Mr. Lloyd's voice dropped out of hearing as suddenly as his courage.

"I'm not Martha," she answered sharply.

"To be sure you are," insisted Mr Lloyd, very firmly. "Where's the—the baby?"

"The what?" cried the young lady wonderingly.

"The baby—Martha's baby. Where is he, she or it, or whatever you call 'em?" Mr Lloyd was desperate; but, as boy babies and girl babies all looked alike to him, his mixture of gender was excusable.

An unmistakable girlish giggle of mirth rippled from the shadow of the big hat, and its owner let the suit case drop to the porch. It landed squarely on Mr. Lloyd's toes and brought the tears to his eyes

"I'm 'the baby,'" she laughingly said as she stood for a moment on the threshold of the door taking him in from head to foot, striving to fix the identity of her mysterious cross examiner. "I am 'baby' still, despite my advanced age and the centuries of futile protest at my mother's tender forgetfulness Did I not do well for an infant"—this very saucily and boldly—"to travel way from Albany to Blairville all alone, only to meet a severe interlocutor barring the entrance to my aunt's home?"

"But Martha?" was all Mr Lloyd could say

"Is my mother, who will arrive tomorrow I came ahead Does this satisfy you, Mr Impertinence? Please remove your foot from beneath my luggage and carry it into the house Babies, you know, must have attention and attendance."

Mr. Lloyd extracted his foot with alacrity, though he did not obey the command He had fought and won many hard legal battles, but here was a golden opportunity to prove that there are times when discretion is the better part of valor He fled, or to be truthful, he limped abruptly down the little path toward the village As he collected his thoughts being a good lawyer and a wise jurist, he decided to revise and to overrule his previous judgment as to babies

"Girl babies eighteen years of age and upward, with rosy cheeks, laughing eyes and fluffy hair and saucy dimples," mused Mr Lloyd, a smile playing round the corners of his mouth "do not come within the purview of the precedents you have heretofore cited to support your case Judgment is accordingly rendered for the infant defendant, with costs to the belligerent plaintiff Case dismissed"

Mr Lloyd returned to the Melton household to dinner as placidly as usual As time progressed he learned whether his decision as to one girl baby in particular was to be affirmed by a higher court, from which there is no appeal

Sincere honest testimony like the following should convince every skeptic.

A. C. Sprague, stock dealer, of Normal, Ill., writes. "For two whole years I was doing nothing but buying medicines to cure my kidneys. I do not think that any man ever suffered as I did and lived. The pain in my back was so bad that I could not sleep at night. I could not ride a horse and sometimes was unable even to ride in a car My condition was critical when I sent for Doan's Kidney Pills. I used three boxes and they cured me. Now I can go anywhere and do as much as anybody. I sleep well and feel no discomfort at all"

A. C. SPRAGUE.

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Sprague will be mailed on application to any part of the United States Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo N Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.
